MARLANA STODDARD

Marlana Stoddard is artist-in-residence and art instructor at Dodge City Community College. She was previously in this position in La Crosse, Kansas, where she taught through the public schools for three years.

"As an artist, I have always been interested in form, with subject being subordinate to this. As a painter, I have searched for a form that is particular to my nature and indicative of the intrinsic harmonies of self in environment."

JIM WILSON

Jim Wilson, art and ceramic instructor at Dodge City Community College, has the following philosophy on pottery:

"Pottery is a field that no longer provides mankind with useful, necessary items. Its medieval purpose is no longer valid in the 20th Century, since technology has replaced the common ceramics form with plastics, molded clay production and glass."

"The purpose of my pottery is to provide an esthetic experience through container forms that may or may not be useful. Their existence is intended to provide an alternate choice to computer, machine-age experiences."

"I work with clay and crude glass in a variety of handling and firing conditions to provide exciting yet serene viewpoints of what my attitudes toward reality are."
